Growing Practices of the Farm

Haffey Family Farm uses sustainable, non-GMO growing methods. Cover crops are grown during the winter season to prevent erosion and add nutrients back to the soil. Haffey Family Farm is not certified organic; however, since the produce we grow also feeds our family, we try to grow as organically as possible. At times, in order to prevent disease or insect damage, we use organic sprays. We do not use herbicides on our farm and only grow non-GMO produce.

The farm's CSA runs for 22 weeks, starting approximately on June 1 and ending on October 31.

Risk of Crop Failure

By joining Farm's CSA, both Farm and Member are agreeing to share in the risk of crop failure, due to factors such as inclement weather, pests and acts of God. If a crop failure does happen, members will receive other crops ready for harvest.

In an event of a substantial crop failure a refund of the share fee is not available. However, the Farm reserves the right to deviate from these policies.

Crop Surpluses

Farm also sells produce at other local farm markets. Farm does not segregate CSA production, but CSA production does receive our priority. In the event of a crop surplus, other markets will be served after Farm has satisfied Member's shares.
